College Students and Business Executives Collaborate During the 2015 College Diversity Summit

On Saturday, November 7, 2015, the Georgia College Diversity Summit was held at Emory University. Students from universities around the Atlanta area were in attendance to learn about social branding, networking and financial literacy, while also participating in a career fair.

The summit began with registration and breakfast, which allow students to network with each other. The keynote speaker, Amy Whitley, Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer of UPS, gave an inspiring speech on her personal story and her company. Following the speech, the students went to four breakout sessions offered during Concurrent Session I and II.

The event luncheon featured keynote speaker, Tamika Curry Smith, President of the TCS Group, who gave a great presentation encouraging the students to be their very best self. This portion of the event culminated in the announcement of the three 2015 scholarship recipients by National Sales Network President, Nicole Williams.

Following this, the students went to the two breakout sessions offered during Concurrent Session III. Afterwards, they rejoined for closing remarks, giveaways, and recognition of the engaging emcee, Kenneth Middleton. The event ended with a career fair in which students were able to visit with representatives from several Atlanta area companies and learn about potential positions and their requirements.

The Georgia Diversity Council would like to thank all of the sponsors for their support of the event: Arby's, Coca-Cola, Emory University and TekSystems. Special thanks is also given to the speakers, moderators, career fair representatives and volunteers for setting aside their time to participate in the summit.
